

Contents

Introduction by Ciara Breathnach & Catherine Lawless	15
Catherine Marshall History and memorials: fine art and the Great Famine in Ireland	20
Niamh O'Sullivan Troubled waters: high art and popular culture, Dublin, 1821	30
Philip McEvansoneya '... merely an antiquarian curiosity': the purchase of the reliquary of St Lachtin's arm in 1884	48
Emily Cullen From the Comerford Crown to the Repeal Cap: fusing the Irish harp symbol with eastern promise in the nineteenth century	59
Elizabeth Boyle Margaret Stokes (1832-1900) and the study of medieval Irish art in the nineteenth century	73
Catherine Lawless Devotion and representation in nineteenth-century Ireland	85
Patrick Maume Rome and Kenmare: Margaret Cusack and Ultramontane print culture	98
Robin J. Kavanagh Pictures of piety and impropriety: Irish religious periodicals of the 1830s	115
Maxine Leroy Text and illustrations in Samuel Lover's Handy Andy	129
Leon Litvack From painting to photograph: James Robinson's The Death of Chatterton	141
Justin Carville Resisting vision: photography, anthropology and the production of race in Ireland	158
Olivier Coquelin Two visions of Irish republicanism drawn up in captivity: John Mitchel's Jail Journal and Michael Davitt's Leaves From a Prison Diary	176
Carla King 'Always with a pen in his hand ...': Michael Davitt and the press	186
Virginia Crossman, Georgina Laragy, Sean Lucey & Olwen Purdue Sources for the history of the Irish poor law in the post-Famine period	198
Felix M. Larkin Two gentlemen of the Freeman: Thomas Sexton, W.H. Brayden and the Freeman's Journal , 1892-1916	210
Patrick Naughtin The Melbourne Advocate , 1868-1900: bastion of Irish nationalism in colonial Victoria	223
Kiera Lindsey A new stage for the stage Irish: Sydney 1844, Lanty O'Liffey and The Currency Lass; or My Native Girl	234
Sarah Roddy 'The emigrants' friend'? Guides for Irish emigrants by clergymen, c.1830-82	247
Seán Ó Duinnshléibhe 'Mar is fánach a' teacht go cruinn mar 'athair': Dáibhí de Barra's surviving translations	257